“What I really like about Occupational Therapy is that it allows you to play a major role in enhancing your client’s quality of life. Whether it is leisure, lifestyle, or work related, you can make a real difference. It’s important to build a relationship and establish trust – it allows a client to feel comfortable sharing personal information and engaging in the process. Kind of a conversational listening and learning time. That’s important to discovering the right information to develop appropriate recommendations towards a goal of making their life feel fulfilled, one step at a time.

On the personal side, my life is all about trucks, wheels, construction - the current passions of our young son. Who knew?
